annual report

1 9 9 7 - 1 9 9 8

Dear Mr. President:

As a nation of learners we depend upon the resources of libraries and museums throughout our lives. They connect us to ideas, to our communities, and to the future.

Every year millions of people are inspired, informed, enlightened, and entertained as they visit museums and libraries in their communities, in their travels, or on-line. Each year millions more benefit as business professionals, health professionals, historians, and scientists use museum and library resources to research and solve the problems we face. IMLS helps museums and libraries respond to the ever-changing needs and expectations of the American public. IMLS helps libraries and museums give communities engaging places for families to visit. They are centers for inquiry, investigation, and scholarly research. They are assets that contribute to our quality of life and stimulate the development of healthy and economically viable communities.

I am pleased to present the 1997-1998 Annual Report for the Institute of Museum and Library Services. The report details IMLS' federal investment in families, citizens, and communities across the United States.

THE acting DIRECTOR

Bringing libraries and museums together into a strong and responsive federal agency has been the focus of IMLS activities since 1997. In its first year of integrating museum and library services, IMLS concentrated on creating efficient, centralized management, building new staff, and forging professional alliances across both fields. Long hours, high energy, and lots of idealism established the solid core of services and professional leadership that characterize the agency today. With this important ground work in place, IMLS is now poised to enter the 21st century with a renewed sense of vision and imagination.

At the core of this tantalizing future is the opportunity to explore the commonalities between museums and libraries. As essential civic, cultural, and educational institutions, museums and libraries are part of the same changing social environment. Similar forces are profoundly impacting both institutions. Dramatic advances in technology, shifts in demographics, and demands for lifelong learning opportunities are affecting how information is collected, organized, and retrieved. New services and skills are required to guide the educational needs of all audiences, traditional and non traditional. Museums and libraries both help support the collective memory of their communities and preserve their cultural identities.

One of the most vital roles for museums and libraries in the near future is supporting the growing and changing needs of the 21st century learner. In March 1999, Diane Frankel, then director of IMLS, convened a meeting to discuss the broad topic of learning in the next century. We projected a variety of images of the 21st century learner, defining a range of learning styles, ages, technical abilities, and motivations for learning. From this set of assumptions, we examined a series of questions. How will this new learner affect and be affected by museums and libraries? What unique qualities do libraries and museums bring to lifelong learning? How should we rethink and reinvent traditional approaches, structures, and organizational cultures to match the changing modes of learning?

An inventory of valuable learning assets developed quickly. Together museums and libraries hold a vast array of information and resources. They offer authentic experiences with the power to shape new connections. Museums and libraries are traditionally oriented toward service, often customizing the learning experiences of their learners. In many communities they are already trusted resources, safe havens for children, and centers for families and communities. Libraries and museums are also well endowed with the expertise to guide new learners through the maze of information flooding our lives.

The conversation begun in March was a provocative first step in exploring the future of museums and libraries as partners in education. Among its conclusions was a widening of the circle of institutions that may become potential partners. We identified ourselves as part of a sector of "non-formal" educational institutions, a sector that includes a varied group of institutions and industries, such as theaters and churches, broadcast media, and publishers. We speculated about the power of forging new alliances and transforming our communities into campuses of learning—ideas that offer great potential for the future.

IMLS' primary responsibility is to strengthen museums and libraries in their service to the public. Education is central to that service and will continue to be the focus of thoughtful discussion. In the coming months IMLS will broaden the conversation and invite many voices to consider the challenges ahead for museums, libraries and the 21st century learner.

Overview

Legislative History

On September 30, 1996, the 104th Congress passed the Museum and Library Services Act (P.L. 104-208) and created a new independent, federal agency: The Institute of Museum and Library Services. The new agency draws together administration for many federal grant programs for museums and libraries. The United everywhere with access to a lifetime of learning opportunities. The new Institute builds on this record of success and adds something new: Support for museum and library collaborations that encourage a natural alliance to expand the public's access to educational resources.

For museums, the new legislation allows IMLS to continue offering museum programs authorized under the former Museum Services Act. These programs strengthen operations, improve care of collections, increase professional development opportunities, and enhance the community service role of museums. All types of museums from art, history, and children's museums to zoos, aquariums, and nature centers, both large and small, urban, suburban, and rural, benefit from this program.

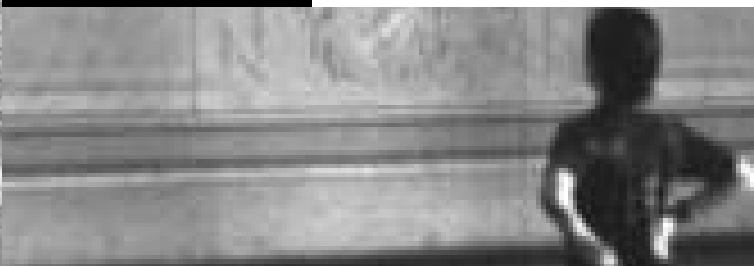

For libraries, the new Library Services and Technology Act refocuses and streamlines library programs previously authorized under the Library Services and Construction Act and Higher Education Act. The new program helps states develop library networks to share library information resources across institutional, local, and state boundaries and to reach those for whom library use requires extra effort or special materials. The Act also authorizes a national grant competition for education and training, research and demonstration, preservation and digitization, and models of cooperation between libraries and museums. Additionally, the law allows the agency to make grants to improve Native American and Native Hawaiian library service. The new program is designed to serve all types of libraries: public, academic, research, school, special libraries, and consortia.

The new law provided that the director of the former Institute of Museum Services, Diane B. Frankel, become the first director of the new agency. In the future, the director of the agency will hold a four-year term and rotate between an individual with library and information service expertise and an individual with museum expertise. Ms. Frankel directed the agency through the transition until she stepped down in March 1999.

Transition

1997 was a year of listening and program development that was critical to achieving a smooth transition to a new set of library programs. The National Commission on Libraries and Information Science as well as a host of library professional associations, library users, and librarians provided expert assistance to the new agency. In States has a long history of using federal dollars to leverage other public and private support for our nation's libraries and museums and to expand public access. Federal dollars encourage innovation and leadership and provide people in communities

continued

May 1997 and again in September 1998, joint meetings of the Commission and the members of the National Museum Services Board were convened. Members deliberated thoughtfully about the new agency and gave particular attention to the new National Leadership Grants. They recommended that the agency support projects that would have lasting value for the American public with benefits that extend well beyond the grantee institution.

In 1998 the first grants under the new Library Services and Technology Act (LSTA) were made. One result is a new state grant program that is free of burdensome regulations, allows more flexibility to use funds to address high priority library needs, and allows the Institute's grants management staff to substantially improve customer service. The first National Leadership Grants were made after receiving an overwhelming response with over 250 applications requesting over $40 million ($6 million was available to be awarded.) Over 200 Native American Tribes received basic grants with an additional 42 grants for technical assistance and 13 enhancement grants.

As part of the creation of the new agency an Office of Research and Technology was established, signaling an increased emphasis on program evaluation and outcome reporting as well as allowing a stronger role to support nationwide research. The Office has begun efforts that will have long-term impact.

The transition from the Institute of Museum Services to the Institute of Museum and Library Services was also marked with the publication of To Listen and To Lead. In honor of the twentieth anniversary of the Institute of Museum Services, the staff together with the National Museum Services Board, convened a year-long series of conversations about the future of federal museum funding. The result, a publication entitled To Listen and To Lead, is a statement of philosophy, leadership, and action to guide the Institute's service to museums. The report noted, "Twenty years ago, the Institute of Museum Services inaugurated an unprecedented program of federal funding for museums. This new agency was the first to provide grants for general operations. It was also the first to give substantial support to small museums and extend grants to museums of all types and sizes. The Institute embodied the nation's confidence in its museums. It grew out of a fundamental belief that museums—as places of collective memory and centers for education—merit public support."

For two decades, IMS has helped America's museums strengthen their capacity for preservation, for education, and for building community connections. Thousands of success stories show what a difference the agency has made: major improvements in collections care and preservation, productive museum-school partnerships, increased outreach, enhanced institutional planning, and stabilized funding bases. Five principles were identified to guide museum services into the future. The report concluded that the Institute has:

- A program of support that works for museums and the public they serve.
- An obligation to promote innovation and excellence.

- A role in articulating "promising practices."
- The potential to stimulate sustainable partnerships between museums and other organizations.
- A responsibility to articulate museums' role in our society.

Leadership: Museums and Libraries Serving Communities

All IMLS grants help strengthen the role of museums and libraries in their communities and in our society. IMLS places a special emphasis on demonstrating impact through documenting results and sharing promising practices. We do this by developing special grant initiatives, highlighting model institutions with national awards, convening conferences, publishing promising practices, and conducting research. The following are some recent leadership activities that help to articulate the vital role of libraries and museums.

In 1997, IMLS began a leadership initiative to help museums enhance the quality of civic life. Since that time IMLS has supported dozens of programs that impact the lives of thousands of Americans of all ages with a special focus on children and after-school programs. New partners include regional Head Start programs, libraries, churches, neighborhood housing groups, urban leagues, community economic development initiatives, mental health facilities, and programs for the aging. A national conference in St. Louis, Missouri brought together museums and their community partners from throughout the nation.

IMLS also fosters museums' role in their communities through its annual National Award for Museum Service. The award recognizes museums that have an outstanding record of service to the community. In FY 2000, IMLS will also award a National Award for Library Service, to celebrate outstanding American libraries that make significant and exceptional contributions to their communities.

Research activities include two nationwide surveys. The first studied the relationship between museums and schools. The study demonstrated that nearly 90% of American museums provide K-12 educational programming. Schools are increasingly using museums for educational programs that help teach school curriculum. An increase in students, teachers and schools served in the past five years was reported by 70% of the museums surveyed. IMLS grants for museum- school partnerships have involved 82,000 students, 228 schools, and 82 museums. The agency also published a workbook titled True Needs True Partners which profiles 15 partnerships and provides tips on successful programs.

The second study examined library-museum partnerships. The quantitative and qualitative study found an interesting paradox. Interview findings showed that libraries and museums typically do not consider each other as partners but when they do partner they report a very positive experience. Together they can increase access to their communities, enhance education, attract new audiences, and expand the reach of their programs. Partners report that they have similar missions and audiences, and once in a partnership both view their collaboration as a natural fit.

IMLS plans to continue championing the role libraries and museums play in our society.

MUSEUM SERVICES BOARD

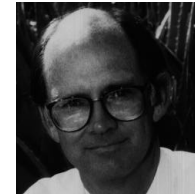

The National Museum Services Board (NMSB) is an advisory body made up of fifteen Presidentially-appointed and Senate confirmed members who advise the Institute on general policy with regard to museum services. Board members represent the museum community and the general public, and through their collective representation, contribute specific expertise and broad knowledge of the entire museum field.

The National Commission on Libraries and Information Services (NCLIS) is an advisory board made up of sixteen Presidentially-appointed and Senate confirmed members who make policy for the Institute of Museum and Library Services. Commission members represent the library community and the general public, and through their collective representation, contribute specific expertise and broad knowledge of the entire library and information services community. NCLIS is a permanent, independent agency of the federal government. In addition to their charge of advising the executive and legislative branches on national library and information policies and plans, the Museum and Library Services Act provides authority to advise the Director of the Institute of Museum and Library Services on general policies with respect to library services.

award for Museum service

for museums

"This national honor is a tribute to the power of museums to engage children, families, and communities, in towns and cities all across America," said First Lady Hillary Rodham Clinton at a White House reception for National Award for Museum Service recipients.

Since 1994, the Institute has provided national recognition to museums that demonstrate a core commitment to public service through innovative programs that enrich community life. Selected from a nationwide call for nominations, these award winners are finding solutions and demonstrating the power of museums to build community. They help keep children in school, keep neighborhoods alive and interesting, and help advance our understanding of the diverse and rich traditions that make our country great.

The 1997 National Award for Museum Service was awarded to three institutions: The Children's Museum of Indianapolis, IN; The Museum of Fine Arts, Houston, TX; and the National Aquarium in Baltimore, MD. In 1998, the Award was given to three museums: Belknap Mill Society, Laconia, NH; Henry Ford Museum & Greenfield Village, Dearborn, MI; and the New Jersey Historical Society, Newark, NJ.

Acting Director Beverly Sheppard said, "People depend on museums as focal points of their community's cultural and educational landscape. Through imaginative programs and partnerships with schools and civic organizations, museums are unmatched in the variety and breadth of knowledge they make available for everyone. The National Award for Museum Service places a national spotlight on the role of museums in our society. By telling the story of these six inspiring institutions, IMLS tells the story of how museums all across the country use the power of their collections and exhibitions to address issues of central importance to us all."

The Belknap Mill Society has cultivated a network of partnerships to provide year-round community service, help revitalize downtown Laconia as a cultural and artistic center, developed a new city park to draw in new audiences, and bring an appreciation of the arts and humanities to the townspeople. The Society has positioned itself as a leader in the business and cultural community and has changed Laconia for the better.

The Henry Ford Museum & Greenfield Village has developed the Youth Mentorship Program, a small yet intense program targeting twelve at-risk students and families. Through the program, which is run by museum staff volunteers with the help of a local community resource center, students not only learn valuable job and communication skills, but also gain self-confidence and self-esteem and how to give back to the community. Results have been impressive—student attendance has drastically increased, and grade point averages have improved by 70%.

The New Jersey Historical Society is undergoing a remarkable transformation from an “antiquarian” organization to an “open” institution, by targeting children and adults in Newark who have not visited the Society in the past. In collaboration with social services agencies and groups, the Historical Society has developed after-school and family programs that provides a safe place for children and families to learn together. In a city where the population faces many economic and social challenges, the students’ willingness to return for Society programs is a testament to their understanding and commitment to their new “community friend.”

The Children’s Museum of Indianapolis has a long history of going beyond traditional museum programs to help its inner city neighbors. Community service activities include free admission for inner city children, after-school activities for youth, family involvement programs, and construction of a park open for neighborhood gatherings. The Museum also recently allocated staff and funding to establish a community initiatives department, which is collaborating with social services agencies, corporations, and the city to develop a vision for serving the community—including child care, urban beautification, and economic and housing development.

The Museum of Fine Arts, Houston was established in 1900 as an outreach program for the public schools; since then it has developed into a major art museum. Education and public programming remain at the heart of the museum, and the museum draws upon the diversity of the community. One successful program is “Artists and Schools at Work”, in which local artists, teachers, students at area schools, and community leaders work together to create new works of public art to be displayed at community centers.

From its beginning, the National Aquarium in Baltimore has been committed to serving the diverse needs of the Baltimore community. Programs such as Deaf Awareness Day, Access Aquarium, and First Saturdays and Sundays offer exclusive access and activities for physically and mentally challenged visitors. Unique educational opportunities—on-site tours, gallery and classroom activities—are available to 200,000 Maryland students and teachers. The Aquarium also offers free teacher training and classroom materials, the training of teen-age “ocean ambassadors”, and undergraduate and graduate internships for local youth.

Nominations for the award were widely solicited and reviewed by the National Museum Services Board, the museum advisory body for the Institute. With the advice of the Board, the IMLS Director made final selections. The award-winners were honored at a White House celebration hosted by the First Lady. In addition, to honor the achievements of each museum and its community, the Director attended local celebrations and activities.

GENERAL

OPERATING SUPPORT

Museums that qualify for General Operating Support (GOS) grants demonstrate outstanding performance in all areas of museum operations. Applicants perform self-evaluations, involving every aspect of operations—from collection care and maintenance to education programs and exhibits. Professionals in the museum field, with an average of 13 years of experience, evaluate GOS applications. This nationally recognized award signifies the highest peer approval a museum can receive.

Grant amounts are equal to 15 percent of the museum's annual operating budget, up to $112,500, and assist museums with essential operating expenditures helping the museums continue to provide high quality services. Each grant is given for a two-year period.

assessment program

MAP helps museums assess their strengths and weaknesses and plan for the future. The grants are funded by the Institute of Museum and Library Services and administered by the American Association of Museums. The grants benefit museums with the advice of a specialized museum professional who conducts an on-site survey covering one aspect of the museum's operations.

Museums can choose from one of three types of assessments. The Institutional Assessment reviews the museum's entire management and operations. The Collections Management Assessment focuses on collections care and management priorities. The Public Dimension Assessment addresses the public's perception, experience, and involvement with the museum.

MAP assessments lead to improved professional standards and practices within museums of all sizes.

Conservation Project Support (CP) awards support a wide range of conservation activities to help museums safeguard their collections, including environmental improvements, conservation training, surveys and treatment. Museums of every type, from art to zoo, are eligible, and funding can be used for living and non-living collections. These grants, of up to $50,000, are awarded by a competitive peer review process and require a 100 percent match by the recipient.

CP also funds Exceptional Projects, providing up to $75,000 for projects with broad-reaching effects that benefit multiple institutions.

assessment program

The Conservation Assessment Program (CAP) helps museums lay the groundwork for effective collections management. The grant, which is funded by IMLS and administered by Heritage Preservation, supports museums of all types, from arboreta to zoos and anything in between. CAP supports a two-day visit by a conservation professional who reviews the overall condition of the museum's collection, the physical storage and exhibition conditions, and the collections practices, among other factors. The assessment helps museums establish goals so that their holdings can be preserved and made available to the public for years to come.

LEADERSHIP INITIATIVES

In 1997 and 1998, Museum Leadership Initiatives supported innovative partnerships between museums and community-based organizations. These collaborations harness the combined strengths and ideas of the partners to address pressing community issues. Projects involve non-profit community-based organizations such as civic organizations, religious groups, special interest clubs, and business organizations. Award recipients have transformed their communities in a variety of ways: revitalizing a town as a cultural center, studying the healing effects of museums, and creating a virtual exhibit celebrating local history.

1997

Albany Institute of History and Art
Albany, NY

$29,000

The Albany Institute of History and Art, in conjunction with the Albany County Department of Aging and the Albany-Colonie Regional Chamber of Commerce, plan to create Mature Meaning: Senior Adults and the Museum, a series of pilot educational programs that include conversations about art/history, artmaking/writing activities, and the viewing of original art and artifacts. Mature Meaning will make cultural resources available to those who lack adequate opportunities to participate in the arts or are unfamiliar with the art museum experience.

Belknap Mill Society
Laconia, NH

$28,120

The Belknap Mill Society, City of Laconia, Downtown Merchants Association, Chamber of Commerce, local schools, Laconia Housing and Redevelopment Authority, Laconia Rotary, and the National Park Service will strengthen their partnership by designing a successful downtown revitalization project. Using focus groups, the Society will develop programming for the revitalized historic area and provide leadership for the community and local historical groups. The Society plans to document and ensure the project's continued success in workbooks, articles, and by establishing a web site.

for museums

The Children's Museum $30,000
Boston, MA

The Children's Museum and the Federated Dorchester Neighborhood Houses will plan a multicultural family literacy project to bring their staffs together with parents to create collaborative family literacy programs for the museum and home. Parent teams will help design programs that promote literacy development among children ages 3-7 and that demonstrate how to use the museum as a learning environment to promote family literacy.

Cincinnati Zoo and Botanical Garden $25,170
Cincinnati, OH

The Cincinnati Zoo, Urban League of Greater Cincinnati, Avondale Community Council, Carmel Presbyterian Church, and Corinthian Baptist Church will create a pilot program to develop and deliver programs to support the educational and family involvement needs of minority families. Using the resources of all of the partners, this planning grant will develop and test strategies focusing on technology to improve educational outcomes and family involvement in the education of minority students.

Indiana University $29,976
Bloomington, IN

Three museums in the Indiana University system will partner with the non-profit Center for Behavioral Health on The Therapeutic Potential of Museums: A Collaboration for Development and Study. This project seeks to establish an ongoing collaboration to develop and study the therapeutic potential of museums for adults and families in Bloomington, Indiana. This project will contribute to the mental health of adult and family clients through the creation and delivery of therapeutic museum experiences.

Minnesota Children's Museum $30,000

St. Paul, MN

The Minnesota Children's Museum in collaboration with Ramsey Action Program Head Start and the St. Paul Public Library will conduct FACETS: Families And Communities Educating Together. The project will bring parents together to plan educational family activities involving reading. The partnership will identify parent needs and interests as well as obstacles and incentives to active involvement in their children's learning, introduce Ramsey Action Program families to educational family resources, and cultivate parents as leaders and decision makers in family programs and activities.

Museum of History and Industry $28,489
Seattle, WA

Seattle's Museum of History and Industry, in collaboration with the Seattle Public Library, will receive a planning grant to develop and test Nearby History, a history interest program led by a museum historian at branch libraries for neighborhood residents. This program's goals are to raise the level of historical understanding in the community by reaching a multi-generational audience, offer access to the museum's programming in history, increase knowledgeable use of the library's resources, and strengthen collaboration between the museum and library. The Museum of History and Industry hopes to implement Nearby History at a larger circle of branch libraries in 1998-1999 and to present the project at professional conferences, in journal publications, and on their web site.

Museum of Science and Industry $25,318
Tampa, FL

The Museum of Science and Industry, Hillsborough County Head Start, and the Hillsborough County Public Library will collaborate on a joint planning process to identify how best to serve the needs of the teachers, parents and families of Head Start students. The goals for the collaborative project are: encourage parents and teachers' appreciation for the value of math, science, technology, and literacy in various stages of childhood development; provide community-based activities which promote family unity; and create a model of collaboration that can be applied to other organizations.

Western Heritage Center $30,000
Billings, MT

Working with the Yellowstone Heritage Partnership, the Western Heritage Center will develop the Electronic Field Trip Project. This pilot project will provide a rich, thorough interactive classroom experience for two sites: Pictograph Cave State Park, and Chief Plenty Coups Museum and State Park. The project is a comprehensive regional initiative to provide better interpretation of the history, culture and natural resources in the Yellowstone River Valley region for families, students, and visitors. Ten teachers will work with project staff to develop custom, school-oriented Internet home pages for each of the two sites. The Home Pages will feature text, graphics, audio, curriculum guides, and suggested lesson plans.

1998Arizona Science Center $38,997
Phoenix, AZ

The Arizona Science Center will partner with the Phoenix Preparatory Academy and the Valley Big Brothers-Big Sisters to implement the Computer Connections Club after-school program. Held in a technology and multimedia lab based at the Science Center, the project will offer training in new technology to children, teachers, and mentoring volunteers. Participants will also work on a series of computer related projects in technology, art, science, robotics, and music. The Computer Connections Club aims to help children, as well as their teachers and mentors, become comfortable with and achieve a certain mastery of technology and applied science.

Armory Center $50,000
for the Arts
Pasadena, CA

Walk to Art: Artists in Community Partnerships is an after-school project developed by the Armory Center for the Arts and six area schools and libraries. The project will place experienced and trained artists from the Armory faculty in residence for two years at the partnering sites, which serve children and families in low-income neighborhoods of Pasadena. The project is designed to move artists beyond the role of a "visiting artist" to become agents for community development by changing the local perception of the place of the arts in education, recreation, business, and family life.

Bronx Zoo $41,407
Bronx, NY

The Bronx Zoo and Homes for the Homeless will work together to provide an after-school program entitled, After-School Adventures in Wildlife Science. The life science program will be developed to meet the special educational and emotional needs of homeless students and their families. Children from 80 homeless families in the South Bronx will receive essential academic knowledge and skills that they need to succeed in school and break the cycle of homelessness.

Discovery Center $19,047
Museum of Rockford
Rockford, IL

Discovery Center Museum, Rockford Public Library, and City of Rockford Head Start are expanding their long-term partnership to create a better living environment in their community for families served by Head Start. The project will raise awareness among Head Start parents and children about the importance of learning throughout a lifetime and motivate them to use museum and library facilities. The partners will educate museum and library staff to respond to the special needs of Head Start families.

Discovery Center $32,410
of the Southern Tier
Binghamton, NY

The Discovery Center, Binghamton City School District, and Binghamton University will work together to establish a Children's Center for the Arts and Culture, an after-school program for children in kindergarten through second grade from the north side of Binghamton, an area of at-risk, impoverished immigrant families. The Center will offer enriched learning activities for children after school to increase excitement for learning, foster socially responsible behavior, and strengthen interpersonal relational skills among the youth.

El Museo del Barrio $35,600
New York, NY

El Museo del Barrio and Union Settlement Association, East Harlem's largest social service network, are partnering to bring after-school programming to the residents of East Harlem, one of New York City's most ethnically diverse and poorest communities. The partners will develop and implement a Community Connections After-School Program consisting of five eight-week arts education and art-making courses over two years. This will enrich the Union Settlement's after-school programs by incorporating the rich Latino culture and the collection of El Museo del Barrio.

Indiana University $49,995
Department of Recreation and Park Administration
Bloomington, IN

The project will expand on a 1997 Museum Leadership Initiative grant. Through the combined efforts of three museums at Indiana University, three mental health programs in Bloomington, and a research group from Indiana University's Department of Recreation, the project focuses on the therapeutic impact of museums on persons living with HIV/AIDS, seniors, and mentally ill adults. Their work thus far suggests that a person's connection to the artifact, together with his/her role as visitor, contributor, or volunteer, impacts a person's self-esteem and connection to others. The partners plan to further refine these theories and tested them on additional populations.

Lower East Side $23,700
Tenement Museum
New York, NY

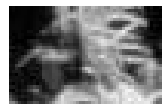

Familiar Stranger: Learning English through History is the program developed by the Lower East Side Tenement Museum and the University Settlement to provide English-as-a-Second Language courses to new immigrants. Using curriculum based on the diaries, letters, oral histories, and other documents left by earlier immigrants, today's newcomers will become fluent in English while drawing strength and inspiration from those who came before. The program also offers a connection to social services provided by the University Settlement House, including job training, job placement, counseling, and child care.

Museum of Science $49,998
and Industry
Tampa, FL

The Museum of Science and Industry (MOSI) and its partner, the Tampa Metropolitan Area YMCA, will establish an innovative, after-school science enrichment, education and mentoring program for at-risk youth in Hillsborough County. At-risk high school students from MOSI's highly successful YES! (Youth Enriched by Science) Team Program will mentor and teach, using hands-on science activities, similarly at-risk elementary and middle school students. Through this project, two groups of at-risk youths (instructors and students) will receive a constructive after-school educational experience.

Oakland Museum $50,000
Oakland, CA

The Oakland Museum and the Spanish Speaking Citizen's Foundation Youth and Family Services will partner to develop a program for collecting, preserving, and exhibiting community history. The program will use low-income, inner-city youth as researchers and exhibit designers and will include the development and implementation of a Summer Youth History Project.

Peabody Museum $49,907
of Natural History
New Haven, CT

The Peabody Museum of Natural History will work with New Haven institutions, including the City Department of Elderly Services, the Housing Authority, Casa Otonal, and the Jewish Home for the Aged to produce the Peabody Senior Series, a program to reduce the isolation of seniors and enhance their quality of life. The Peabody Senior Series will feature a mobile lab with museum specimens, museum-based special-interest programs involving hands-on teaching and multimedia presentations, a city-wide celebration of Senior Citizens month, and development of a booklet of museum resources for senior citizen centers.

Science Museum $49,730
of Minnesota
Saint Paul, MN

Studio 3D (Digital Design and Development) is a two-year pilot project which brings together the Science Museum of Minnesota, the Minneapolis Parks and Recreation Board, and the Minneapolis Community and Technical College. The partners will provide after-school programming in science, art and technology to low-income school-aged youth at the Loring Park Art Center.

Tennessee Aquarium $17,439
Chattanooga, TN

A large number of Chattanooga institutions are working together to improve the lives of children in their community. Three area museums—the Tennessee Aquarium, Hunter Museum of American Art, and the Warner Park Zoo—are collaborating with the Chattanooga-Hamilton County Bicentennial Library and several city agencies, including the Mayor's office, the Department of Parks and Recreation and the Housing Authority. The immediate goal is to pool their resources to build an after-school program focusing on science and art education, literacy and library use, and behavior and social skills that will enrich the lives of local children living in public housing complexes and empowerment zones.

Tsongas Industrial $50,000
History Center, University of Massachusetts—Lowell
Lowell, MA

Tsongas Industrial History Center and its partners, Lowell National Historical Park, the Lowell Public Schools, and the Merrimack Watershed Education Projects will work together to develop and pilot two interdisciplinary multi-media curriculum units in both electronic and non-electronic forms. The project will engage 4,000 high school students in learning through experience in the subject areas of water quality and environmental protection, technology, and community development.

professional services Program

The Professional Services Program provides much needed resources to the museum community through local, state, regional, and national professional museum organizations. These competitive awards are given to professional museum organizations to help their members provide better service to the

for museums

public, through professional development or by enhancing the role of museums in cultural tourism. Funds of up to $50,000 are awarded through a competitive peer review process and are used mainly for workshops, seminars, courses, and publications.

1997

American Zoo and Aquarium Association
Bethesda, MD

$20,000

The Association will identify, analyze, and disseminate data on existing examples of all zoos and aquariums within AZA that are working successfully with departments of tourism. The data collected will help to outline how AZA members can create or join existing cultural packages.

Association of South Dakota Museums
Pierre, SD

$11,638

The Association will sponsor four collections care workshops and an evaluation session using the state's video-conferencing network for South Dakota's rural cultural institutions. Held simultaneously at four sites within the state, the training sessions will allow museums to learn collections care basics without incurring large travel costs.

Association of Youth Museums
Washington, DC

$35,555

In response to requests for leadership development, the Association will develop and implement a two-day Leadership Institute in the fall of 1998 for 50 children's museum leaders. Institute participants will focus on effective leadership paradigms and issues critical to the sustainability and future evolution of the children's museum field.

California Association of Museums
Santa Ana, CA

$27,845

The California Association of Museums will conduct a census of existing and emerging museums within the state and produce a museum directory, which will be distributed free of charge to travel industry representatives to assist them with cultural tourism efforts.

Florida Association of Museums/Foundation
Tallahassee, FL
and Florida Art Museum
Directors Association
Vero Beach, FL

$50,000

Capitalizing on the success of the first national conference of state museum associations, this project will continue the process of strengthening state associations' abilities to assist museums in providing services to the public. This conference will focus on developing the leadership base within states and designing a sustainable system for ongoing communications and resource sharing among state museum associations.

Maine Association
of Museums
Augusta, ME
and Maine Humanities Council
Portland, ME

$50,000

This project will assist Maine museums in developing and disseminating models of successful cultural tourism programs. Project activities will focus on developing web sites, creating marketing strategies, and photographing museum sites. Model programs will be shared at two statewide conferences.

Michigan Association of Museums
Flint, MI

$41,600

The Association will present a one-day statewide conference on cultural tourism followed by four meetings throughout the state, establish a Michigan cultural tourism information clearinghouse/communications network, and produce a "how to" cultural tourism manual. The project's methodology and communications tools will offer a model than can be replicated by other associations.

Mid-Atlantic Association
of Museums
Newark, DE

$14,400

The Association will provide scholarships for twelve participants from small museums in the mid-Atlantic region to attend the Collections Care Training Program in January 1998. The program will provide small museum staff with enhanced in-house capability to care for the collections they hold.

Nebraska Museums
Association
Kearney, NE

$16,079

The Association will conduct a state-wide conservation needs assessment of textile collections in Nebraska museums and historical societies and will deliver four training sessions to museum personnel from small institutions on the fundamentals of preserving textile collections.

Pennsylvania Federation of Museums and Historical Organizations
Harrisburg, PA

$24,826

The Federation will conduct a study of the economic and educational impact of museums and historical organizations on the local economy, to be followed by a series of workshops to publicize and explain the survey instrument. This survey will provide quantitative data about museums' contribution to Pennsylvania's economy and education.

Upper Midwest
Conservation Association
Minneapolis, MN

$24,758

The Association will present two workshops for museums and historical societies of the Upper Midwest to assist them in understanding and designing improved environments for their facilities, leading to improved care of their collections.

Utah Museums
Association
Salt Lake City, UT

$32,703

In cooperation with the Utah Office of Museum Services, the Association will engage the staff of six rural Utah museums over the next two years in a state-wide intensive experiential training initiative. Workshops will address issues such as traveling exhibits, volunteerism, educational programming, and marketing.

Western Museum
Association
Los Angeles, CA

$39,572

This project will establish two crucial electronic communications networks—a web site and a list serve—to enhance communications between state museum associations so that they may share information on programs, publications, and office operations in order to improve professional services to their constituent museums.

1998

American Association
of Museums
Washington, DC

$45,658

As a continuation of the series on best practices in the museum field, this national association will plan and conduct six regional study groups to explore four aspects of museum interpretation: philosophy, planning, content, and strategy. This information will be combined with institutional self-assessment, and be evaluated to articulate the best practices for interpretation in the field. This information will be compiled and disseminated as a model in the Association's new Standards Series.

American Association
of State and Local History
Nashville, TN

$50,000

This planning project will develop a template to help local history organizations answer some of their most pressing needs: staff training, local school curriculum contributions, and assistance with services for the family researcher. This national association will develop media kits, history suitcases, and models for their implementation, workshops for staff and volunteers, and a listserv for local organizations.

Colorado-Wyoming
Association of Museums
Pueblo, CO

$24,320

In response to a growing need to preserve new materials, the Association will present a three part series of collections care workshops in four locations around the two-state region. These workshops will focus on preservation of photographs, paper-based materials, audio-visual tapes, CDs, and digitally produced images.

Hawaii Museum
Association
Honolulu, HI

$43,214

Building on the success of a previous IMLS-funded project to study the economic impact of Hawaii's museums, this association will design and develop a comprehensive brochure of all the museums on the islands. This brochure will be marketed to visitors through hotels, visitors' bureaus, and museums. Also, themes and linkages among sites will be planned with the cooperation of the Hawaii Visitors and Conventions Bureau and a marketing advisory group.

Illinois Heritage
Association
Champaign, IL

$8,994

This state museum association will conduct a series of six in-depth courses designed in direct consultation with small museums and their collections care needs. The instructor will tailor training to the specific needs of each institution through a planning trip made prior to the course and will provide written recommendations for collections care practices.

Museum Association of Arizona
Bisbee, AZ

$47,495

The Association will develop practical applications for cultural tourism in museums in the state. A site visitation committee experienced in tourism, museums, and marketing will conduct two-day site visits with museum staff, tourism officials, and community members in three historically and developmentally diverse areas of the state. The committee will evaluate the community's historical and tourism products and work with museums to develop a strategic plan for cultural tourism projects. These plans will be combined into a Tourism Workbook that explains step-by-step how museums can build cultural tourism programs.

Museum Education
Roundtable
Washington, DC

$20,000

This national museum educators association will compile a new publication including articles drawn from issues of their Journal of Museum Education from 1992-1999, as well as new articles written specifically for the new compilation. This publication will be made available in print form, on the association's web site, and through a one-day symposium.

Museum Trustee
Association
Washington, DC

$10,000

This national association will expand its pilot program Trustee-to-Trustee to 150 museum leaders. This project will introduce topics such as museum ethics, inclusion, and executive/board partnerships through presentations at 5 workshops at national, state, and regional museum association conferences.

New England
Museums Association
Boston, MA

$34,650

In response to the need to train museum professionals in the rural areas of New England, but recognizing the difficulty of travel, this regional association will conduct 14 workshops in seven different rural areas. Based on existing workshops, these programs will be customized to the needs of each community.

Southeastern Museums Conference
Baton Rouge, LA

$25,963

The Association will host a series of workshops to train museum professionals in disaster preparedness and response. Conservators and preservationists from the Southeast familiar with disaster decision making and recovery techniques will lead the participants in confronting a staged water disaster involving paper, books, photographs, textiles, wood, metals, and a building structure. There will be a workbook with a list of Southeast resources for disaster recovery and a training video of the conference proceedings.

MUSEUMS FOR

THE MILLENNIUM AWARDS

Museums for the Millennium, part of the Professional Services Program in 1998, supported projects in nearly every state. State museum associations are using the funds to carry out statewide activities focusing on the millennium theme of "celebrating our past and giving gifts to the future." Networks of museums in each state worked together to

for museums

highlight the role of museums in cultural tourism and to encourage family learning through festivals and other family focused activities. Funds were available to every state, including the District of Columbia, and were awarded on a non-competitive basis.

LEADERSHIP grantsand
for Libraries

IMLS awarded the first National Leadership Grants in 1998. A departure from the federal funding previously available for libraries, the program provides new opportunities for libraries to find creative solutions to issues of national importance, to provide leadership for other organizations to emulate, and to establish innovative partnerships with museums.

With grants from $15,000 to $500,000, National Leadership Grants support work in four areas that address the most pressing needs in the field of library science. The funds support: education and training in library and information science; research and demonstration of projects that improve library access; preservation and digitization; and model program of cooperation between libraries and museums that meet common community needs while emphasizing education and the efficient use of technologies.

state grants

The Library Services and Technology Act (LSTA) of 1996 promotes access to learning and information resources of all types of libraries for individuals of all ages. Through the legislation, the Institute of Museum and Library Services provides funds to state library agencies using a population-based formula. State agencies use the appropriation either to support statewide initiatives and services or distribute the funds through competitive subgrant competitions or cooperative agreements to public, academic, research, school, and special libraries in their state.

The Library Services and Technology Act outlines two broad priorities for this funding. The first is for activities using technology for information sharing among libraries and between libraries and other community services. The second is for programs that make library resources more accessible to urban, rural, or low income residents, or others who have difficulty using library services. Each state has a five-year plan that outlines how state programs will address the Act's priorities.

In addition to the State Grants, LSTA authorizes a competitive grant program for the Pacific Territories and the Freely Associated States. Grant funds are to be used for the same purposes as in the State Grants program. Selection of grantees is facilitated by the Pacific Resources for Education and Learning (PREL), a non-profit institution in Hawaii.

native american & native hawaiian LIBRARY SERVICES

With three types of grants, the Native American Library Service program helps improve library services for an important, but often underserved, part of the nation's community of library users.

Basic grants support core library operations and ensure a minimum level of public library service to eligible applicant libraries. Technical assistance grants are designed to heighten the professional proficiency of the library staff of established libraries serving eligible tribes. Enhancement grants are competitive grants to advance a library's operations to new levels of service.

The Native Hawaiian Library Services program offers an opportunity for improved library services for Native Hawaiians by providing a single grant to an organization that primarily serves and represents Native Hawaiians. The priorities of the program, as established by the Library Services and Technology Act of 1996, are to use technology for information sharing between libraries and between libraries and other community services and to make library resources more accessible.

1998 Enhancement Grants

Arctic Slope Regional Corporation $100,947

panelists

1997 - 98

In 1997 and 1998, 1,433 museum, library and conservation professionals volunteered their time to review applications for Institute of Museum and Library Services competitive grant programs. The success of IMLS programs is largely due to these reviewers who dedicate their time and expertise to advance the highest professional practices in the field. These volunteers are from museums and libraries of all sizes, disciplines, and types, and represent a broad cross-section of America.

In addition, in 1997 and 1998, 76 individuals traveled to Washington, DC to serve on grant review panels. Their expertise and thoughtfulness helps to shape program procedures and policy. Their names are listed below.
